Four Seasons Astir Palace, Athens Riviera

Sand and ruins—the gods are rejoicing! Athens finally has a great beach hotel, on 75 acres on the pine-covered Vouliagmeni peninsula 30 minutes from downtown. It has 303 spare modernist guestrooms and bungalows, 2,000 artworks, eight bars and restaurants, and three private beaches, not to mention (natch) an Olympic-size pool. There’s no better way to beat the withering heat of an Athenian summer.

Euphoria Retreat, The Peloponnese

Think Canyon Ranch spread on four levels over a pine-and-cypress-covered mountainside and surrounded by important ancient sites. This haven for well-being combines tailor-made programs enriched with age old Hellenic and Chinese practices, and including everything from beauty treatments to water therapies, specialized diets, meditation, and yoga sessions, all amid Byzantine art and Zen minimalism. No surprise that the word euphoria derives from the Greek.

Parilio Hotel, Paros

The beguiling, under-the-radar island of Paros is finally on the map for travelers accustomed to jetting off to well-trod Mykonos or Santorini. Thirty-three understated white-block suites arranged around a large outdoor pool blend seamlessly with the araucaria tree-filled grounds and impossibly blue Aegean beyond, a Cycladean sanctuary befitting the gods. And in keeping with heavenly ambrosia, its Mr. E was just voted best hotel restaurant in Greece.
